C.S. Lewis puts his wages on a God who holds goodness and pain in a paradox. The Problem of Pain demonstrates a more distant, less emotional reaction to humanity's situation, while A Grief Observed reads like a psalm of lament from within pain itself.

In 1940, at age forty-two, Lewis penned The Problem of Pain accompanied by a humble, written admission. Fully realizing that he might be underestimating the reality of serious pain, he was compelled to intellectually address the issue, for he understood its profound implications toward belief, or disbelief, in God. After all, Lewis reminds us early on in this writing, it was the problem of evil that foundationally motivated his prior atheism.

The Problem of Pain answers the universal question, "Why would an all-loving, all-knowing God allow people to experience pain and suffering?" Master Christian apologist C.S. Lewis asserts that pain is a problem because our finite, human minds selfishly believe that pain-free lives would prove that God loves us.

C.S. Lewis approaches the problem of pain from a Christian perspective and (to me) successfully explains the concept of pain in relation to God and humanity, divine and mortal. Lewis challenges our very thinking to a level that is looking beyond the obvious. This book encourages to expand our moral horizon just as much as our horizon of intelligence.
