Be careful because many modern industrial products are called mastic. In the case of the non-toxic plant resin, it may be used to make chewing gum, however its properties do not allow it to be a substitute for gum in the same recipes, as it resembles more of a wax or gelatin. It can be used, but you'll need to change the recipe accordingly.

How to Use Xanthan Gum in Recipes thespruceeats com

Xanthan gum is produced by natural fermentation of corn, soy, wheat, or cabbage. The bacteria digest the sugars in these vegetables and produce a complex sugar polymer. Alcohol is added to make it drop out of solution. The xanthan gum is then dried and converted into a powder that can be used in food and other products.
