Coastal California travel Lonely Planet

In coastal California, those cinematic fantasies really do come true. You can learn to surf, play a game of pickup volleyball or light an oceanfront bonfire on cool nights. Sunny beach towns from Santa Cruz south to San Diego, each with its own idiosyncratic personality, give you perfect excuses to go play outside. Heading north of San Francisco, dramatically windswept sands have inspired generations of poets and painters, offering miles of oceanfront for beachcombing and tramping in solitude.

Ultimate road trip California's Central Coast Lonely Planet

The jaw-dropping coast off of Highway 1. Photo courtesy of the California Travel and Tourism Commission/thatgirlproductions.com. Big Sur's dizzying coastal cliffs, bohemian retreats, blustery beaches and redwood forests are all cradled by Hwy 1, south of Carmel-by-the-Sea. Much ink has been spilled extolling the raw beauty of this craggy coast, yet nothing quite prepares you for that first glimpse through the windshield of its wild, unspoiled nature.
