There are some continuity issues: in the 2009 version of Nemesis, Jason Rafiel is a German writer, but in A Caribbean Mystery, he is an English chemical manufacturer. Miss Marple does not refer to herself as Nemesis at any time in this story, despite herself and Mr Rafiel associating the name with her in Nemesis.

I agree. The original Caribbean Mystery was much better. It also made lots more sense. Again there was too much music in the background to understand the dialogue.
