We don't get much of a sense of how he went (psychologically speaking) from an ally to his Jewish neighbors to a Jew-hunting NAZI beyond the bare facts of what he did and when he did it. Similarly, Rosenzweig as we meet him in old age remains rather opaque to the reader; I would have liked for the author to show us more of how Rosenzweig kept his mask on and how he justified it to himself. It seemed to me there was too much 'tell' and not enough 'show' to that aspect of the book.
