The Measure of the Magic begins exactly where Bearers of the Black Staff ended, which is basically where everything fell to pieces. The last descendant of the Knights of the Word lies dead, fallen to the poison of a treacherous troll. Phryne Amarantyne has been imprisoned in Arborlon, framed for the murder of her own father. And the Drouj army stands on the doorstep of the valley, threatening to invade and conquer it all.

I enjoyed the storyline, but the ending seemed wrong. This is the story of a young man who is a tracker becomes Knight of the Word without any say so or training and his tracker partners who uses magic but with a price.

The Measure of the Magic picks up right where Bearers of the Black Staff left off. There is no recap of events that took place in that book so it is best to read the two back to back. The series is a good read but not my favorite of the Shannara stories.
