The Natural Soap Book Making Herbal and Vegetable Based

Full detailed instructions on making soap at home using lye, vegetable oils and other natural ingredients. Good descriptions, scientific explanations, troubleshooting, etc. plus a philosophy I agree with. I haven't attempted to make soap yet and I'm not sure that I will, but if I try it, I'll follow the instructions in The Natural Soap Book.

The Natural Soap Book Home and Garden How To Lehman's

I have also learned that vegetable soaps do not have to be soft that there is more than one right temperature for soapmaking that preservatives do not have to be seven-syllable synthetics and that a soapmaker does not have to be a chemist to understand enough to figure out solutions. It has taken me three years to sort out fact from fiction when it comes to soapmakers and their theories of soapmaking. I write this book so that the next hopeful soapmaker can save a little time.

The Natural Soap Book Making Herbal and by Susan

I've been making cold process soap and selling the results to consumers for six years. I find The Natural Soap Book: Making Herbal and Vegetable-Based Soaps - by Susan Miller Cavitch to be an excellent foundation. * I'd like to point out the recipes are very large and reducing the values of lye/fat/water tend to be a little complex.
